

HYPERALLERGIC

From September gallery in Kinderhook to Ligenza Moore Gallery in Cold Spring, I set off on an ambitious road trip to 10 art spaces participating in this year's event.

Nicole Cherubini's sculptural ceramic works in The Motherlode at September gallery

The adventure started on Friday in the village of Kinderhook with a visit to September gallery to see The Motherlode, a solo show of Nicole Cherubini's sumptuous sculptural ceramics and 20 years' worth of documentary-style photographs of her performances.

"Before UAW, when I opened September nine years ago, there was no map, there was no communication about what was happening," gallerist Kristen Dodge told me. "UAW has really helped connect the different institutions, galleries, and artists in the area and create a map that people can follow this weekend or later." Dodge and Cherubini were excitedly preparing for the artist's performance the next day at The Campus in Hudson. Cherubini commented that she intends for the piece to "encompass all that is going on up here, become a part of it, and to honor the life that I live up here."
